PROBE THIEF'S STOMACH FOR DIAMOND RING

X-Ray Fails to Reveal Stone Believed Swallowed by Astute Crook.

HARTFORD, Aug. 17.—When an x-ray picture of the stomach of Patrick Larock, of Rochester, failed to show positive results to the detectives who believe Larock swallowed a $600 diamond ring, it was announced "other methods" would be tried and that, anyway, Larock would be held on the charge of theft.

The prisoner was the nerve center of a thrill for hundreds who happened to be on the streets in Hartford's business center yesterday, when he dashed out of the jewelry store of Lux, Bond & Lux, with George Lux in pursuit.

Lux accused him of running off with a diamond ring when the jeweler turned to get another tray, but Larock refused to open his mouth to say a word, and the police say that he was in plain sight during all the chase and had no chance to pass the ring to any one.

When booked at headquarters he was ordered to open his mouth. At first he pretended not to hear, but finally threw his head back, gulped hard, and said harsh words about the police who would arrest an innocent man, when the guilty man, far ahead, had escaped.

When an x-ray examination and a stomach pump were mentioned, Larock still refused to "open up" as to what he had done with the ring, and finally the police carted him to the hospital, where the radiograph was negative, so far as jewelry was concerned.

Dinty's Gang Barred.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—Prosperity broke up his home, Joe Shlimansky, ex-grocer, told the judge. He found he had $60,000 and his wife started making him keep his shoes on in the evening.

HAPGOOD FEELS
PEACE IN ERIN
YET POSSIBLE

Sinn Fein Cause Gains While Negotiations Pend, According to Journalist.

By NORMAN HAPGOOD.

The outlook for peace in Ireland is not as bad, I think, as a mere reading of the documents made public this week might lead us to conclude.

In the midst of a civil war, following seven centuries of trouble, the Irish people are out of difficulties, when it comes to pass, could scarcely be expected. The documents are concluded with many delays, counter-proposals and 414 negotiations.

The latest documents at least show progress. They enable us more clearly to disentangle what important things have been agreed on from the important things that are still at issue.

The Dail Eireann meets in Dublin today. Far-reaching consequences, of course, will follow from the mood of its members. They will inevitably be disappointed and angered by some of the things said by Lloyd George in behalf of the empire, and by Sir James Craig in behalf of Ulster. But on the other hand they have every reason to be encouraged with the position in which negotiations now are. While the armistice is on, and while fundamental conditions are being calmly and fully discussed, the Irish cause cannot help making ceaseless gains.

English Waking Up.

This situation, of peaceable discussion after civil war, has the immeasurably important effect of waking up the liberal elements in England, enabling them to hear all sides, increasing their distrust of the present cabinet and the present Parliament.

If the situation in England were normal, the cabinet would have fallen long ago on account of the fiasco it has made of its attempt to deal with Ireland. Britain, like most of the victorious countries in the later war, has suffered morally and intellectually from her victory.

One result is to leave her with the most incompetent and least representative Parliament she has had in modern times. A Parliament composed largely of the type of men who will support the government in order to hold their own offices, no matter how incompetently or wickedly the government may behave.

Even on such an inferior Parliament, however, public opinion, if active, can make itself felt. The more liberal opinion in England had been largely quiescent about Ireland, through ignorance and through fears increased by the very lies of the prime minister and his agents. It is now having a chance to wake up.

Premier's Talk Silly.

De Valera has admitted a significant principle when he concedes that force is not the right answer of South Ireland to Ulster. That admission is one of the points at which quiet pressure may yet lead a long way.

Lloyd George will have to concede much more than he has conceded yet. His talk about economics is pretty nearly imbecile. It is kept from being imbecile only by being completely incorrect. When he tries to scare England with the picture of an Ireland flourishing in successful competition because of low taxes, at the same time that her small population keeps up a big navy and the largest army proportionately in the world, he knows as well as any one else that he is talking nonsense. But nonsense is one of his weapons. In the economic field he will have to yield everything, except some trifling arrangement about the national debt. In regard to such aspects of national safety as aviation, for instance, there is still room for good trading, as there is in the relations between Ulster and Great Britain.

Famous Irishman's View.

Among the men whom I know personally in Ireland the most brilliant is George Russell, famous everywhere as "A. E." In the September issue of Pearson's Magazine, "A. E." has a characteristic article putting the whole controversy on a high level.

From his admirable and sometimes beautiful essay there emerges at the end the same point that is put first in importance in De Valera's last statement. Ireland must decide for herself. She cannot admit that she is subject to coercion.

Russell for Dry Official.

President Harding is seriously considering the appointment of Former Congressman J. E. Russell, of Sydney, Ohio, as Federal prohibition director for that State, it was learned at the White House today.
